The Storage of Vegetables for Winter Use

Each fall and winter a greater number of requests are received at the Scott Experimental Station for information
regarding the storage of vegetables for use during the winter months.

The average prairie home has a dug-out or cellar underneath the dwelling where large quantities of perishable high priced vegetables may be stored. If a furnace is in the cellar it is advisable to partition
off a store room to avoid excessive heat about the vegetables.
A single thickness of lumber is sufficient for this partition.
By opening a door into the furnace room the temperature
may be raised during cold periods. When merely an earth
pit is underneath the dwelling
the temperature may be kept sufficiently high to protect from frost during severe weather by the use of a lantern or a single burner coal oil stove.

For most vegetables a temperature ranging from 34 to 38
degrees F. is most favourable.
Root crops such as carrots,
parsnips, beets and turnips
keep best when packed in moist sand. Cabbage and Cauliflower require a circulation of air and are best piled
not too deeply on slatted
shelves so as to permit airing.
Small numbers may be suspended from the ceiling by the roots. Celery is most successfully kept by placing upright
in boxes and the roots covered with sand and kept moist.

Onions should be thoroughly dried in the sun before storing and then tied in bunches and hung
up where the air can circulate.
Pumpkins and Squash demand a high temperature (40 to 45 degrees F.) and dry atmosphere
with free circulation of air and

CHAPTER XVIII.—Continued

When the hilarious guests, some of them frankly boisterous, began to re-assemble into their original groups and say their good nights, Joanna's gorgeous gown was crushed, her shimmering hair fluffed, and her face sparkling. The night had been like wine to her, and she was vital with the stimulus of it. Her roaster wanted to linger at his parting, but she mocked at him. When she saw that his face clouded she was pretty potent and gave him her hand to kiss. To Kenneth she was more serious. She looked up at him rather shyly.

"You know," he said, "I am taking a very marvelous memory with me!"

"The good to it," was all the comfort she could give him.

Yvonne was contentedly weary. "I am a little shudder at the sight of the debris after a night like this," she informed Joanna when the last guest had gone merrily on his way. "Shall we go up stairs to my room. We can talk it all over, for a while. A party must be talked about before one goes to bed, you know."

They talked until the eye broke into Yvonne's bonfire. Then Joanna, in her tight fitting pajamas and transparent, rolled down bonfire socks, obeyed Yvonne's command that she run upstairs for at least two hours of sleep. She didn't sleep, however, but sat in her cramped bed, her head under a pillow, her chin resting on them. Martha, her own maid, found her sitting there on the

CARRIED WIFE TO BED

Suffered So She Could Not Walk. Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Minneapolis, Ontario.—"I am a practical nurse and I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to suffering women. For three months I was almost helpless and could not get out of the house. I had taken three bottles of it. I was just like a new woman and my head had cleared. I will gladly write to her. I do all I can to recommend it for I have my own health and strength to it."—Mrs. NIELSEN, R.R. 1, Minneapolis, Ontario.

Do you feel broken-down, nervous and weak sometimes? Do you have that horrid feeling of being which sometimes comes to women when they are so weak? Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent to take at such a time. It always helps. When taken regularly and persistently will relieve this condition.

would be waiting for her. Instead it turned into one of the drab streets, also avenues but only in name, and moved swiftly between the pillars of the elevated railroad into some sort of a better grade—old dwellings made into furnished rooms and cramped housekeeping flats; much the kind of houses as that which had been Joanna's at Mrs. Adams'.

The chauffeur scanned the house, many of which were hidden. Joanna gave him more directions through her speaking tube. He stopped just beyond a corner and opened the cab door.

"It is the fourth house from here on this side," Joanna explained. "The recognition is by the sign at the side of the door. It reads 'John Williams, architect.' There'll be an old woman with a rag tied around her head come to the door. If any of the children answer you tell them to get the old woman, she's the landlady. She's all right, if she doesn't think you're an officer come to take her in for having a flower pot or something on the fire escape. If she does she'll slam the door in your face, so you'd better take this bill in her hands as soon as she sees you. Then she'll tell you if Mr. Williams is in. If he is give her your other bill and tell her to keep her mouth shut about the inquiry. If he isn't tell her I'm coming in to talk to her."

CHAPTER XIX.

A View to the Quarters

From her stately cushions in the cabriolet Joanna waited impatiently until her chauffeur, after a brief reprieve at the door of the house to which she had sent him, returned. The man said:

"The woman came. She says Mr. Williams is not at home."

"Then you may wait for me here," a half score of street archers already had gathered about the smartly shining cabriolet. It still glared shadows from the contained the cabriolet of her lodger's sudden silence.

legue than listen to him rave about gurgles and such musty things. The landlady was convincingly drawn when she identified 'John's' as the radical visitor who had strolled so sweetly at her. There was, even, thrilling drama in her elaborate service to the code that "asks no questions and gets no snubbing." She mentioned Joanna from smart little hat to smart, sapphire-buttoned gloves, and raised her own conclusions about the stranger, but she said only:

"Of course you can, Miss. You can go right in. Mr. John's been gone since breakfast. He isn't been doing much work of late, it seems, because he's seemed kind of restless like."

For some mysterious reason the landlady's gaze rested on the sapphire buttoned gloves, as if the depths of them contained the explanation of her lodger's sudden silence.

Little Helps For This Week

He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love.—John I, 8.

Yet while I love, say God the most, I die.

That I can never love you over much.

I love him more, so let me love you too.

Yes, as I apprehend it, love is such.

I cannot love you if I love not him.

I cannot love him if I love not you.

Love to the Lord cannot possibly cast apart from neighborly love.

For the Lord's love is love to the whole human race, which He desires to love eternally, and to adorn, entirely to himself, so for some of them to perish. Wherefore, whosoever has love to the Lord has the Lord's love, and cannot help loving his neighbor.

—Rasmus S. Svedenborg.

High Altitudes Are Reached

Tropical Climate Is Found Far Above

The tropics are not the only place to go for tropical weather. If man could ever get there, he would find a tropical climate far above the earth. At very high altitudes the air becomes extremely warm, according to Dr. H. H. Turner, professor of anatomy at Oxford University. This statement has been confirmed by observations of meteorologists entering the stratosphere. Although airplanes can only get a few miles off the earth's surface, and unmanned instruments carrying balloons ascend no more than twenty miles, the observation of meteors, or shooting stars, extends knowledge of our atmosphere up to about fifty miles.

A cheerful fall must be a great comfort to himself.

Italian Women Are Barred From Office

Not Eligible for Municipal Positions in New Ruling

By a decision made in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, Italian women have been definitely cut off from all participation in the political life of the nation.

It is now ruled, in fact, that women are not eligible for the post of Podesta. The Podesta are the Italian equivalent of Mayors, except that they are appointed by the National Government instead of being elected by popular suffrage.

The women's suffrage movement has undergone drastic vicissitudes under Mussolini's Government in Italy. First he granted the women the right to vote in municipal elections which was generally interpreted as the first step toward granting them suffrage in political elections. No sooner had this law been enacted than the adoption of the system, by Podesta, suppressing the right of becoming heads of municipalities which they had when they were granted the municipal suffrage.

The recent ruling by the Ministry of Internal Affairs forbids the women the right of becoming heads of municipalities which they had when they were granted the municipal suffrage.

Observe Ancient Custom

Remote Districts of Turkey Still Have Death Grief

In remote districts of Turkey, quaint customs still linger despite Anglo's vigilance modernizing act.

One of the strangest is in the distant village of Casere, whenever a death occurs, a public circle is thrown through the streets. Even though the death occurs in the depths of the night, the circle immediately shouts out the doleful tidings and wails all the living villagers with their cries.

The post of Public Death Crier was established many years ago by the British, an official organization controlling religious affairs, which still continues to pay the crier a regular salary for his performance of his grimly duty.

A slot machine that distinguishes coins by both their size and weight has been invented, making it impossible to substitute a fake for a quarter or a piece of lead for a coin.

The best catch in station years by Canadian carriers is attributed to the co-operation of air men who from their machines indicated where the animals congregated in the largest numbers.

She (at country fair)—"Look at the people. Aren't they numerous?" He—"Yes, and ain't there a lot of them."
